

Silver Code supports silver economy and digital inclusion in later life

Amazingly, silver economy has not developed into a real policy yet, but we are happy with this fact. Namely, today's silver economy is basically about making money and profit with services and goods for older people, who are getting ever more numerous. As we view it, in silver economy older people should be considered not only as end consumers, but also as producers and innovators. In order to fully participate in silver economy, social and economic development older people are to take care to develop along with new technology and to develop computational thinking. It is not enough to be informed and to use many new applications and devices. Older people, as we all indeed, should be able to understand algorithms and to use them. Therefore at Slovenian Third Age University, we are running Silver Code an ERASMUS+ European project uniting five partners. It is about programming for older people.