Once upon a time lived Jazon, a Greek hero who was travelling together with a group of hero soldiers to the coast of the Black Sea.

He was looking for the golden wing sheep that was guarded by a terrible dragon.

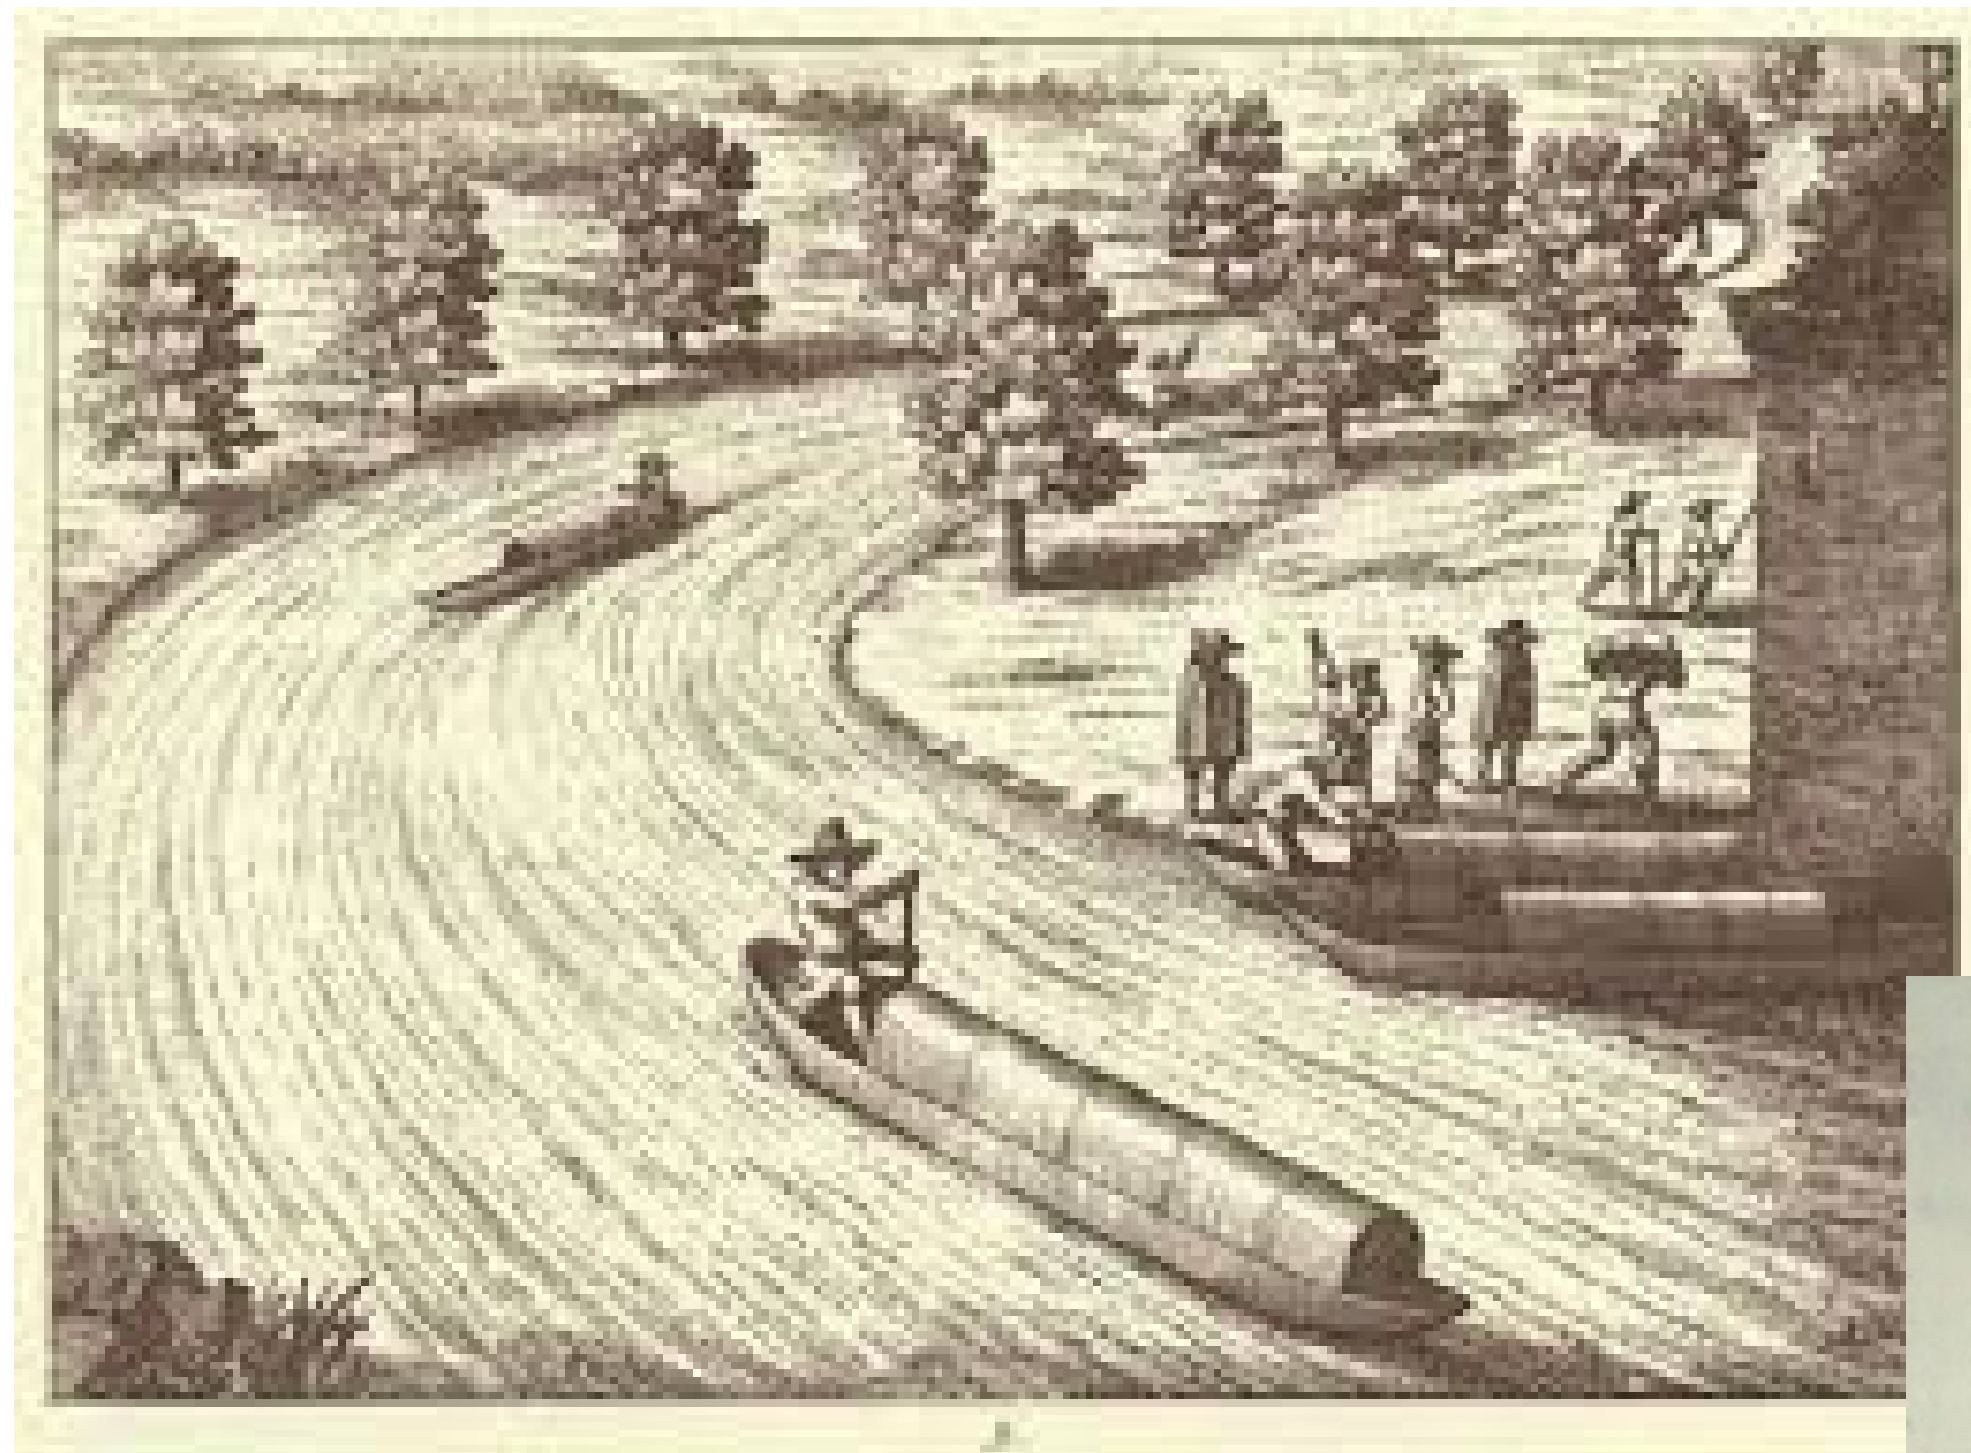

He won the battle with him with the help of Medea who loved him dearly.

Together they wanted to flee away, but Medea's father would not let them go.

By mistake their boat Argo navigated into the Danube and not towards Greece, back home. It was too late now to change the direction of navigation. So, they navigated up the Danube, the Sava and the Ljubljana river.

On the bank of the Ljubljana river, where they had to stop, they built a settlement called Emona.

But there was marshy land nearby guarded by a Dragon again, a huge monster.
Jazon and the Dragon fought and Jazon again was the winner.

So, Emona was built and the Dragon was adopted as the symbol and coat of arms of Ljubljana later on.
